Differences are related to safety, reliability, comfort and agility. Chassis is stronger; the added length is in the door and wheelbase to provide better access & egress, as well as adjustable bucket seats (original was a bench seat that could not be adjusted) & lower centre of gravity; the longer wheelbase provides better stability at speed; the increase in width relates to the addition of side impact protection in doors, a protective cage for the fuel cell and a wider stance for larger tires than the original.

Att: Roger Allard

Dear Mr. Allard,

CVMA Ref. #2722

Thank you for your recent letter in which you request that the company you represent be assigned a World Manufacturer Identifier (WMI) code.

Your company has been classified as a manufacturer of Passenger Vehicles producing fewer than 1000 units per year for export only.

2A9 * * * * * 191 * * *

As you are aware, vehicles manufactured in Canada for export only do not fall under the Motor Vehicle Safety Act which is why your company does not require an NSM. However, if your company wishes to certify the vehicles to meet all Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Standards and apply an NSM, you will need to forward copies of all applicable prototype test records and certification documents for all the standards that apply to passenger cars to Transport Canada.

For more information on the composition of the 17 character vehicle identification number (VIN), please consult Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 115 of the Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations. The Motor Vehicle Safety Act, the Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations and the Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Standards can be obtained from Transport Canada's website at www.tc.gc.ca
